William Clifford Scored Success.

William Clifford and his excellent company scored a decided success in "We Are King" at the Grand Theatre last Friday night. Perhaps no finer attraction has been seen here this season-certainly no better actor has occupied the boards than Mr. Clifford. And his support was very good-a well balanced, strong acting company in the main. The staging and costuming were rich and appro priate and nothing was lacking in the production of the play. "We Are King" is written as a comedy, and is permeated with a quiet humor and absurdity that are quite captivating. But it has also a strong infusion of the tragic element, and is altogether a thrilling and romantic play in the setting of a pretty love plot, which furnishes its strongest feature of every-day human interest. In the dual role of "Hector, King of Kahnburg" and "Gustavus Venner" the happy-go-lucky newspaper correspondent, Mr. Clifford displayed remarkable talent and won a warm place in the hearts of his audience.

"That he has dramatic talent of a very high order is evident, and he possesses a versatility which enables him to sweep from languidease to impetuosity, from a calm survey to the raging of a semi-maniac. He has a fine stage presence, a flexible and resonant voice, which changes quickly as he swings from character to character in his dual role. In short, Mr. Clifford is an actor worth while seeing, one who is making a decided impression.

"Miss Maude Shaw as 'Princess Olivia' was exceptionally clever, and the rendition of the character of 'Barness Stanbach' by Miss Ruth Gadsley was a feature of the performance. Philip White as 'Count Saxendorf,' William A. Carroll as 'Baron Stanbach,' Hugh Wynne as 'Capt, Brunand we shall be glad to have persons interested call and give him a look before selecting a horse for sire. He is in truth a standard-bred, registered, underruled No. 6 and as handsome a specimen of horse-flesh as can be found anywhere. His colts attract attention everywhere they go, and best of all, they are, as far as we know, as sensible and kind as they are handsome.

pleasure in showing him at any time.

He is in charge of William Perry, who will take
